

tours of the Refinery, and had eaten danced and drunk beer at the Naft Club, the Restaurant Annexe and the Seamen's Institute. The Concert Party was resurrected and a show was given in the luxurious Taj Cinema to an audience of more than 1,100, and in spite of the language difficulties it was voted a great success. GAMBIA herself was a great attraction and when the ship was opened to visitors they thronged aboard until it was almost impossible to move and even then hundreds more were still queuing up on the roadway leading to the jetty. Even at the end of the week the efforts of our hosts didn't flag and so it was with a slight feeling of fatigue that we slid quietly away from the jetty early in the morning of Saturday, November 26th. Looking back, we think that our visit probably did some good because, if nothing else, at least a friendly atmosphere existed between ourselves and the local inhabitants. Things we ourselves remember?? Ah! those Persian Girls!!

View over Muscat with Gambia in the distance.

Three days at sea and then we steamed into the narrow rock-surrounded harbour of Muscat, and duly saluted the Sultan. What a perfect Hollywood setting for a film of the mysterious East! The town itself, where no modern building yet exists, is surrounded by rocky hills with a watchtower on every pinnacle; and on either side by a Portuguese Fort. One is still used as a gaol while the other, Marani Fort, is the Police Headquarters and from its battlements ancient cannons, in a return salute, pooped off blue smoke rings into the bright still air. One step ashore confirmed the impressions that little had changed in centuries. Arabs in their flowing white djellabas and armed with guns and daggers in ornamental silver sheaths, strolled along the dusty narrow unmade streets. Under the gateway arches of the old wall, polished flintlocks still hung ready for use to repel any invader. In the bazaar the silversmith and the carpenter carried on their age-old crafts and donkeys brought in their customers from the desert. Night filled the alleyways with black foreboding; small wonder that thirty years before there had been murder most foul so that now there is a curfew after dark when all who venture out must carry a candle lantern.

Unlike other big cities in the East, Karachi still retains a large number of Camel and Donkey Carts.

The only made-up road out of Muscat (and indeed in the whole of the Sultanate) winds up and over a narrow pass for about two miles and into the small town of Mutrah, the dhow port, and terminus of the camel-trains that come in from the desert. This too is picturesque and unspoilt, where the few cars to be seen cannot penetrate the narrow streets. Even the gateway in the old wall is too narrow for them, so a hole has been made at the side through which they squeeze; but at dusk the gateway is still solemnly locked and bolted till the dawn.

There was little to do at Muscat except to observe and take photographs. Nevertheless GAMBIA's Marines left their mark - the ship's name, complete with Admiral's Flag was painted on a rock face overlooking the harbour to join the hundreds of other ships' autographs which have been written here by their crews in the past.

Two days later we were in a very different sort of place - Karachi, the capital of Pakistan - a city which has grown enormously in the past few years. It is amongst other things a veritable 'Clapham Junction of the Air' for most of the world's big Airlines use it as a port of call. This was of particular significance to the Mail Officer and 'Postie', both of whom had been badgered incessantly for some days because of the lack of mail. Now, however, they turned up trumps and produced bag upon bag of the stuff. In fact some people found themselves with so many letters it was almost embarrassing because it meant that they now had to write some!! Not that this was a particularly easy task because the Royal Pakistan Navy had produced such a hectic programme for us that one had little chance to relax. More sport was probably played at Karachi than at any other place visited in the whole commission and I can still see five tired members of the Ship's Hockey team staggering aboard after pulling in the Regatta to be whipped away immediately to play against the Karachi Puffins. In the Regatta with the R.P.N. we were beaten into second place by the teams from the Boys Training Establishment at H.M.P.S.Bahadur, but we were by no means disgraced and a good afternoon was had by the spectators (dare I say by the teams as well?).

On to Bombay and 'The Gateway of India'. What visions this name conjures up-and we were not disappointed. Mind you we had heard that Bombay (like a lot of the rest of India) had gone 'dry' but somehow most people managed to find the 'wet' places. There was the Cornwallis Canteen, the Indian Naval ships and establishments and, of course, the homes of the many local residents who entertained us. They seemed to realise that sailors get thirsty and accordingly dug generously into the rations which they had been saving up for Christmas.

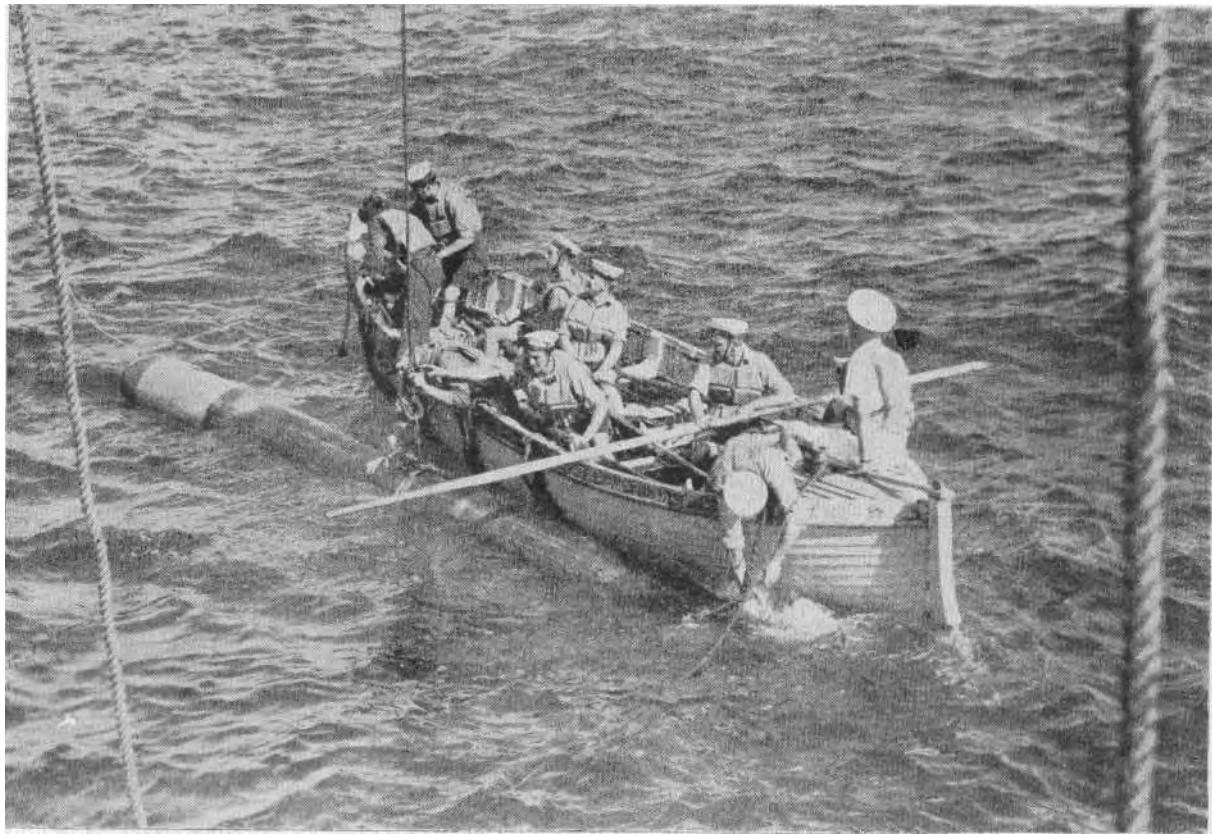

Bombay December 1955 - Stirring the Christmas Pudding "

Bombay is a huge and wonderful place and we could have done with a much longer time there. As it was in five days one could only see few of the sights, providing one could drag oneself away from the well stocked shops and bazaars. More things were probably bought here than anywhere else and the ship went noticeably lower in the water each day as returning libertymen stepped aboard staggering under the weight of parcels of towels, linen, silk materials, woodwork and metal work and leather cases. The officers' motor boat nearly gave up the ghost on one occasion when it arrived at the Gateway of India steps to be confronted by a pile of goods that would have filled a small warehouse!.

When tired of shopping, however, many people went swimming at the wonderful Breach Candy Baths or took a trip to Malabar Hill Bombay's West End - to look down on the wide magnificent sweep of the harbour.

All too soon the visit was over and at 0700 on Thursday 15th December we steamed away, watching the Taj Mahal Hotel get smaller and smaller and smaller in the distance, and set course for Ceylon and the end of the cruise. We had had a most enjoyable time and visited many places in many different countries and our experiences will not be forgotten as the years pass.

Now we are back in Trinco. for Christmas and the New Year, counting the days until we see Guzz again. Before we do, however, we shall have visited Calcutta and Madras and then Massawa on the way home, but publication date for this book looms near and so we shall have to retain in our minds the memories of these places.

The one that got away ?
